

Introducing an innovative new book from
The Rockefeller University Press...

Paul Signac and Color in Neo-Impressionism

by Floyd Ratliff takes a groundbreaking look at the artistic technique behind Neo-Impressionism, explained for the first time in terms of contemporary scientific color theory. Discover how Paul Signac's scientific grasp of color led to artistic boldness and innovation in this unique book by Dr. Ratliff, a leading physiological psychologist and emeritus professor at The Rockefeller University. Included is a translation of Signac's monograph D'Eugène Delacroix au Néo-Impressionnisme, a piece widely regarded as the basic document of the movement but never before available in English.

Beautifully illustrated with Neo-Impressionist paintings and scientific drawings and diagrams, this work is a comprehensive volume of color theory for the general public as well as an invaluable reference for scholars.

"...extremely important in understanding both Neo-Impressionism and color theory as it relates to painting."

*Sanford Wurmfeld,
Chairman, Department of Art, Hunter College*

"...The quality of Floyd Ratliff's work is well known and this is no exception. He brings together expertise in two very disparate fields...and has hit a happy middle ground which should make the color science part of it understandable to artists, and vice versa."

Robert Boynton, Professor Emeritus of Psychology, University of California, San Diego
